

How can you deal with them?

By Libby Haim

Who doesn't know that feeling you get when something doesn't work out the way you want it to? It can be a grade that turns out to be lower than you thought; a friend that disappoints you; or your favorite soccer (כדורגל) team losing an important game. Those "things" causing us that feeling of disappointment are called expectations. When reality is in line with our expectations – everything is great. The problem begins when it's not.

So what can we do to deal with that unpleasant feeling we get when reality doesn't meet our expectations? Here are a few small tips.

1. Know your personal limits. Comparing yourself to other people is the best way to feel bad about yourself. One person can sit down for 2 hours without getting up, while another needs to take a break every 15 minutes. Try to have expectations that fit you – don't try to make yourself fit the expectations.
2. Give yourself credit. When something you did goes well – don't forget to take a minute and compliment yourself! This might help balance you at other times, when things don't work out.
3. Remember – each person is different. Try not to expect from other people the same thing you would expect from yourself. That's not an easy thing to do – but if you try, you might see that people disappoint you less.
4. Do things just for fun. Don't forget to take some time to do things that have no purpose other than just doing them. Life is full of expectations – but not everything you do has to be that way.

Grade

ציון

Disappoints

מאכזב

Expectations

ציפיות

Unpleasant

לא נעימה

Meet

עונה על

Limits

גבולות

Comparing

להשוות

Balance

לאזן

Purpose
מטרה